

The Linux Users' Group of Davis presents:

Silent no more: engaging with with non-geeks through open source video

Monday
April 19, 2010
7pm – 9pm

Explorit Science Center
3141 5th Street
Davis, CA 95616

Did you know that it is very easy to make videos using completely free software? Kdenlive, is a robust, user-friendly video editing application for the Linux operating system that allows you to make decent video shorts with a minimum of effort!

Christian Einfeldt, creator of the Digital Tipping Point project (a library of interviews with Free & Open Source Software users and developers from around the world), will be demonstrating the basics of Kdenlive, and will talk about why it is important to make videos using (and about) open source that are fun for non-geeks to watch.

Free & open to the public!
